Pursuit of Happiness

Everyone has different Pursuit of Happiness. For some, it might be being alone watching television, and for the other, it might be partying. No matter how you define happiness for yourself, the common is that we all want to be happy. Happiness does not mean doing what you want; it means contributing to the community in a way that makes society a happy and a good place—for example, treating everyone equally, preserving the environment, and helping others in daily life. All problems will be solved when the community helps each other. As David O. McKay said: “True happiness comes only by making others happy.”
